

Elizabeth Jackson, PA-C

Family Medicine

“I enjoy teaming with patients to figure out the right health plan for their specific situation and life choices,” remarks Beth Jackson, who has practiced in family medicine, pain management and interventional spine. “I became a PA to have the opportunity to invest in people’s lives and health in a meaningful way. I enjoy getting to know my patients and being a part of their lives over the years.”

Beth describes her communication style as direct, and she welcomes frank, thoughtful conversations. “It is important to address the issues that are the most worrisome to the patient, even if they may not be the most worrisome clinically. Over the years, this builds real connection between the patient and provider team.”
